WHY THIS GUIDE?

We at the Beem Team are very passionate about supporting our current and future neighbors here in Dripping Springs, and we pride ourselves as being a true local resource for this incredible community that has provided so much for us over the years.

We have been in the Real Estate business for over 17 years now, and more times than we can count, we have seen people move into a new home without the much needed support arising from the challenges of moving to a new area, and with little to no information about their new community.

This was the inspiration behind this home and resource guide - we wanted to have a resource available for those who really needed it, for those who live here now, just moved here, or those planning on moving here in the future. We hope that you find this guide helpful and that you grow and learn to love this community as much as we have. If you have any questions or need a resource for something that is not listed in this guide, please contact us as we are happy to help. We look forward to being your future resource for everything Dripping Springs and Texas Hill Country related!

THE HISTORY OF DRIPPING SPRINGS

St. Louis Missouri may be known as the “Gateway to the West,” but Dripping Springs is the “Gateway to the Texas Hill Country.” Founded just a few years after Texas achieved its statehood, Dripping Springs has certainly evolved, yet still remains a small town with just over 4,600 residents. Let’s explore a bit of the rich history of this iconic Texas town and what makes it as appealing to residents today as it was over a century ago.

While Dripping Springs has only been around as we know it since the 1850s, the area was first inhabited by the Tonkawa Indians. Tonkawa means “they all stay together.” They were a tribe composed of several smaller bands and later worked as scouts for the U.S. Army according to the Texas State Historical Association.

In the mid-1800s, numerous families were seeking adventure and a new beginning offered by the American West. In early 1853, three of these families from Mississippi set their sights on the still very wild Texas frontier. While following a trail that took supplies to a US Army outpost in Fredericksburg, the families stopped on Wallace Mountain in the winter of 1853, perhaps taken by the area’s natural beauty, and they decided to stay. The “old three” families included Dr. Joseph McKegg Pound and his wife Sarah, John L. Moss and his wife Indiana, and John Lee Wallace and his wife Malvina, along with the couples' children. The area's rolling hills, rock bottomed streams, majestic views and abundant wildlife were the main reasons for the decision to make it their new home.

By 1857, this modest settlement of log cabins and farmsteads needed a post office, which required them to pick a town name. Indiana "Nannie" Moss called it as she saw it: Inspired by the lush, fern covered, limestone ledges that still drip water to this day. The town become known as, Dripping Springs.

Although there were homes and businesses scattered about over the years, Dripping Springs didn't have a centralized location until 1881 when W. T. Chapman, a young entrepreneur, established a 12 block city plan. The resulting growth included a school, a hotel, mercantile stores, blacksmith shops, a livery stable, a stagecoach stop, a steam engine powered mill, and cotton gins.

Almost a century after the city plan was drawn, Dripping Springs still remained a sleepy farm and ranch community. It wasn't until 1981 that the town would call an election to incorporate itself as a means to push back on the rapidly expanding jurisdiction plans of the City of Austin. Thus, Dripping Springs got into the business of governing itself, electing its first mayor, James W. "Jimmy" Glosson, and soon started experiencing its own significant growth spurt in the mid 2000s.

Although hard to believe, given the growing number of wineries, breweries and distilleries that now call Dripping Springs home, it was in fact a dry county up until 2007. Now however, the locals joke and have coined the town Drinking Springs.

Looking back to around 2008, Dripping Springs only had one stoplight going through town, it had no Home Depot and no HEB, in fact it did not have much at all.

Other than a dip during the Great Depression, Dripping Springs has grown consistently, albeit slowly, with each decade since WWII. In 1980, the town had a population of just over 600 residents. By 1990, over a thousand people called Drippings Springs home, and its population had increased by another 500 residents by the dawn of the millennium.

However, as Austin and the rest of Central Texas have grown, so has Dripping Springs, and now this Texas town has seen nearly triple digit growth in the last five years alone. The actual city limits of Dripping Springs still remains small with roughly 4,600 residents, but what most don't know is that Dripping Springs has the LARGEST ETJ (Extra Territorial Jurisdiction) in the entire state of Texas. If we include the population within the ETJ, Dripping Springs has approx. 45,000 residents (landowners within an ETJ are not subject to the city's building codes and are not taxed by the city).

Dripping Springs is also the official Wedding Capital of Texas, offering around 30 wedding venues within a 15 mile radius, and hosting well over 1,000 weddings per year.

Dripping Springs is also home to one high school, two middle schools and five elementary schools (with more planned to come in the near future), and all of them excel on both the academic and athletic level.

For those that enjoy the outdoors, Dripping Springs also has numerous local swimming spots, miles of hiking and biking trails, great fishing, rock climbing and hunting. All of these factors combined with the rolling hills, natural beauty of the area and the close proximity to Austin is what makes Dripping Springs such a desirable area for so many to call home.

Many visit Dripping Springs during the daytime and are immediately struck by its natural beauty; the rolling hills, the soaring oak trees, the numerous watering holes, the meandering rivers and creeks, and the endless views for days.

What many don't know or get to discover, or even know about, is the unbelievably vibrant night skies that are illuminated by hundreds of thousands of crystal clear stars. All thanks to the dark sky designation.

Back in 2001, the International Dark Sky Association (IDA) was formed by a voluntary network whose primary goal was to raise awareness and promote the benefits of a less light polluted night sky.

In order for a city to earn this designation, they must undergo a rigorous and extensive outdoor light evaluation study, and also perform numerous educational workshops promoting the benefits of being a dark sky community. In addition, they need to continue to meet the dark sky community standards which include items such as strict guidelines on business sign lighting, and must even enforce strict residential lighting rules such as all exterior patio lights on newly constructed homes must point downward toward the ground.

Due to these strict and rigorous guidelines, only about 20 communities on an INTERNATIONAL level have earned and maintained this designation, 5 of which are located in Central Texas, and one of them being our very own, Dripping Springs.

In 2014, Dripping Springs received this designation and have maintained it to this very day; which is the reason why we have amazing night skies and big Texas size stars as far as your eyes can see. Dripping Springs not only wanted this designation for this reason, but also because Central Texas and Dripping Springs lie within the largest and primary migration corridor for North American birds (also making Dripping Springs one of the best cities to bird watch). Even though birds have amazing directional awareness and navigation abilities, it was discovered that they were becoming easily confused at night by the city lights, bright business lights and even from the lights of neighborhoods and small towns.
